feet above the Ohio River at Cincinnati. Located one mile north of the Wisconsinan Glaciation's terminal moraine, the town is the southern-most point of the 519,000 square mile St. Lawrence River Basin and headwaters of the St. Mary's River; one of two primary tributaries of the Maumee River, the southern-most tributary of any of the Great Lakes. The Maumee River's 8,316 square-mile watershed is the largest of any Great Lakes river, supplying 5 percent of Lake Erie's inflow; and once included the 1,500 square-mile Great Black Swamp, the southern tip of which was adjacent to New Bremen. Drained in the 19th century to enable agriculture, the Great Black Swamp was a modern remnant of Glacial Lake Maumee, the Holocene epoch proglacial ancestor of Lake Erie.
